He's fighting to save a town that's not even his... and all he's got are his guns and his wits. Sheriff David Grant has just arrived in Charbury. It's small, quiet, and overrun with outlaws. The Morgan Gang's in charge, and they don't want David interfering. But... he's never run from a battle in his life. And he's not about to start now. Lyle Morgan takes what he wants, when he wants it. And ... that includes women. But when he sets his sights on Hadley, David starts seeing red. David's not just fighting for Charbury anymore; he's fighting for her. And he'll keep fighting until either he or Lyle is dead. But Lyle's not alone, and David is. His deputy wants nothing to do with the war that's brewing. If David wants justice, he'll have to get it himself. He'll battle evil and defend a town that doesn't even want him there. Sometimes doing what's right means making a few enemies along the way, and David's got a town full of them. David's the only one who can save Charbury from destruction, but can he save himself?.
